LSCA: The INCOLSA Experience by Barbara Evans Markuson

Libraries have had to cope with a revolution in almost every aspect of information service. That we are coping is due in large measure to the availability of LSCA funds for studying, testing, and implementing new forms of information, in new ways, and from new infrastructures. Infrastructure is a term for the interlibrary mechanisms by which individuals as well as institutions can achieve consensus, take action, and provide cooperative service to users.

It's a good partnership, bringing together the best in federal, state, and local resources to build a modern information infrastructure.
