The Program on Law and State Government
Annual Fellowship Symposium

FROM THE STATE HOUSE TO THE SCHOOLHOUSE: RELIGIOUS EXPRESSION IN THE PUBLIC SPHERE

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 2006
8:30 A.M. — 1:30 P.M.

The 2006 Program on Law and State Government Fellowship Symposium and the 2007 Indiana Law Review Symposium Edition will focus on an aspect of state law interwoven with America's religious and political history: the many ways states express religious ideas and messages in the public sphere. From state house grounds to schoolhouse classrooms, policy makers and educators grapple with an important yet sensitive issue—how to recognize the importance of religion while upholding the separation of church and state. From religious displays on public grounds to debates about incorporating the theory of intelligent design into public classroom science courses, state government decisions of religious expression become the subjects of public debate, state legislation, litigation, and, sometimes, front page headlines.

Does religion have a place in state governments and in public schools? If so, how does law define that role? In creating a place for students to learn about religion in the public school setting, where does the authority of the state end and that of the local school district begin? Who should ultimately be deciding how religion is addressed in public school classrooms? The state citizens, the local taxpayers, the school district board, the teachers, the parents? The Program on Law and State Government and the Indiana Law Review welcome your participation in the 2006 Program on Law and State Government Fellowship Symposium.
