

On 21 September, the Umbrellamobile, which was my vehicle of choice for the past 18 years, committed suicide, voluntarily and painfully, without any notice whatsoever. It decided to roll down a hill and drive into a wrought iron gate, which made it useless. Some of you were driven through Los Angeles in that vehicle and know how much I loved the car. I mourn its loss and am now looking for a replacement upon which I can hang the personal license plates which identified it so well throughout these many years. R.I.P., Umbrellamobile.
